“We’re excited to add an exciting new feature to the FIFA series for both PC and Xbox One,” said Sean McCabe, FIFA senior producer. “We’ve worked closely with the team at Visual Concepts to develop this technology and we’re thrilled with the results.” Experience a hyper-realistic match – even down to the players. The new technology brings a completely new level of realism. From the moment you step on the pitch, your team mates move and react as they would in a real match. Watch your players dominate the ball and make genuine attacking and defensive moves. On the other side of the ball, your opponents attempt to stop your players, making them attempt different routines, or even the wrong move. HyperMotion Technology is supported by a complete motion capture suit, which is worn by the player. It contains 18 high-definition cameras which capture the player’s movement and collect data such as tackles, players performing aerial duels, and on-ball actions. HyperMotion Technology in FIFA 22 is the first video game to use “HyperMotion Technology,” developed in collaboration with Visual Concepts and created by Digital Anamnesis. HyperMotion is a unique processing and animation tool which uses real-time player tracking for the game’s refined skills – including dribbling, tackling, passing, shooting, shooting on the run, and more – without any compromise to the authenticity of the game. HyperMotion technology can be activated on both console and PC at any time, while the game is running. It is designed to complement the gameplay in FIFA, and adds an incredible level of realism to the sport. HyperMotion technology is activated when a player performs a routine motion which does not normally exist in the game’s physics engine, such as foot work that does not involve a player performing a specific routine, and taking a shot on goal in a more natural way. HyperMotion is always on – you can play the game with or without it on. For every routine action a player takes, you can expect to see a reaction from your opponents – even if they don’t make a tackle or perform a routine action. Best foot forward One of the most significant changes to the game involves the new ‘High Explosives’ mode, which will allow players the opportunity to perform
