She studied Biology as an undergraduate, started a long-term project in Macrobiology as a graduate student, and started working on her doctorate in small cells. With the help of several mentors and a powerful intellect, she developed a critical view of science and rejected conventional science. She describes how her work was often at odds with what she perceived as the accepted way of doing things and how that developed her personal philosophy. As we mature, we develop a very personal view and background in which we must judge new information. For example, she
